This is a free art workshop for up to 200 middle and high school students, selected by their schools, who are participating in this year's Fairchild Challenge art option, "Local edible plants."

Following a presentation by a renowned scientist on tropical fruits in South Florida, students will work in small groups with professional artists throughout the magnificent 83-acre tropical garden.

Light snacks, donated by Whole Foods, will be served to participants. Although lunch will not be provided, students are encouraged to bring a bag lunch and continue to work independently and enjoy the garden following the workshop. Students or their schools are responsible for transportation and all art supplies.
